REPORT FROM THE CHAIR

“154 years ago on June 19, 1865, 2½ years after the Emancipation Proclamation, American slavery finally came to an end when the Union troops made it to Galveston, Texas to inform the slaves that they were finally free. I am happy to say that our very own Martha G. Scott sponsored Senate Bill 384 signifying June 19th as National Freedom Day here in the State of Michigan [Applause]. I bring this up because on yesterday, we celebrated June 19th, better known as Juneteenth, around the country and I will say that unfortunately, I was not very much aware of that significance of that until about 23/24 years ago when I was out in the West Coast in Las Vegas and many of the people in Las Vegas come from Texas and the people from Texas told me about Juneteenth and about June 19th and they celebrated highly on the West Coast, and obviously in Texas and now as they years has gone by, we are celebrating it more and more across the country. So thank you, Commissioner Scott, thank you for all the celebrations that we had on yesterday acknowledging Juneteenth and the freedom of our slaves from the 1800s.”

Commissioner Scott provided remarks

Chair Bell Continued:

June is actually a very historic month because as we will hear later on, we have the suffrage movement which is why we are all here in white today. So I am excited that in a few moments we will hear from Commissioner Melissa Daub and our guest speaker, Dr. Nancy Kursman as we discuss and commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Women’s Suffrage Movement here in Michigan.
